CROWD HEARS REV. H. W. SWEETEN

Large crowds are attending the re-vival at the Nazarene church, where the Rev. Howard W. Sweeten of Ashland, Ill., is in charge. Last night he spoke on "Repentance." He said in part. Repentance is the foundation of Christian character. If a man's repentance is not genuine his Christianity will likewise be faulty. There is no true repentance unless it is followed immediately by renunciation of the things of which we profess to repent. Continuing in sin is a public advertisement of the fact that we have not yet repented.

Meetings will be held every night at 7:30 during the remainder of the week. The sermon subject tonight will be "God's Masterpiece." Special music is being featured.

IN BOND CASE

Governor Howard M. Gore announced today that he had deterred action on the application for executive clemency for John C. Bond, former state auditor, at the request of Bond's at-torneys, who will file additional pa-pers to support their plea.

Bond's appeal for a pardon or parole was filed at the executive's office last week after the state supreme court refused to docket an appeal from his conviction for misuse of state funds and sentence to six years' im-prisonment. The bond of $10,000 allowed the former official by the Kanawha courts to perfect his appeal expires October 1

Now, all of a sudden, with the talking pictures and the radio, the human voice stages a comeback.

Out of Hollywood come stories of the difficulties of such an accomplished person cs Mary Pickford. There is a great deal to do about it all. Miss Pickford's director is very mysterious over some new method of production in talking pictures and all the nervous notables of the war and now seem to run along fairly well stabilized at 14,000,000. The art of the elocutionist who used to thrill with her ahs, oohs and exercises in sotto voice, is again in the land.

According to the mode, folks should become ear minded. Therefore the purists are beginning to listen for imperfections and dialetical mannerisms in the great and the near great. One calls attention to Mr. Hoover's mispronunciation of "illumines." He uses the sounds for which "illoomuns" is a phonetic symbol. Probably the whole Mississippi valley would have thought him a little hifalutin if he had pronounced it perfectly.

Governor Smith prefers "raddio"-as undoubtedly do a large number of his constituents. Certainly no one south of Fourteenth street and east of Broadway failed to understand that "foist" meant "first." The real sport will begin when the English novelists who have been lecturing in America discover the radio. Then one shall eee how the literary societies are going to react to the word when they hear it pronounced "litry." It may change their "schedule."

At any rate it is great to be in voice again.

German Statesman Dies

In the death of Count Ulrich von Brockdorff-Rantzau, Ambassador to Moscow, Germany has lost one of its ablest statesmen. A skillful diplomatist, he had gone far with presentation of the German case in many quarters of the world. He was the first minister of foreign affairs of the German republic. He headed the German delegations to Paris for the peace conference, and made one of the most impressive addresses delivered on that occasion.

It was Brockdorff-Rantzau's plea for leniency that, notwithstanding it was turned down, proved by the mastery of its presentation and the facts which he showed that it was entitled to more consideration, and would have had this consideration but for the fact that the hatreds in the ears of the allied spokesmen would not permit

Men's and Women's Songs

Equality between the sexes should not extend to singers' programs. So declares a famous American baritone He admits it is a matter of individual opinion on the part of the artist, although he himself feels strongly on the matter.

"I don't sing a woman's song; I won't even sing a song if the text is not such as would naturally come from a man's mouth. And I don't want to hear women, however great they may be as interpreters, sing the 'Erlkonig' or any other song, traditional or otherwise that suggests strongly the male spirit."

He sees no reason why men should sing lullableson the concert stage, at least; he probably does not dictate a father's choice of songs at home. And he sees no reason why a woman should sing swashbuckling sea songs or drinking songs or the love songs of a masculine suitor to a fair maiden.

He undoubtedly will find many persons to agree with him about this when they stop to think it over. Ordinarily, however, if the songs themselves be beautiful, if the singer has a pleasing voice and interprets with dramatic and artistic skill, the listeners are satisfied.

The lesson I have in mind today is nlea for conserv of the teeth won't cure incurable disease and in many instances keeping the teeth would be better than ex tracting them. In any event, expert advice must be depended on to decide the fate of the tooth. I beg of you not to jump at conclusions.

There is no question that the causes of many diseased hearts can be which are supposed to add to popu raced to pus infected teeth or tonsils. It is pus from deep seated centers that is most likely to cause serious in volvment of remote organs. In every breakdown of health, where the cause is not clearly indicated, we have not done our duty until careful search has been made for such a center of pus formation. The teeth are the most likely seat of the infection, the tonsils coming next.

One of the dangers we of the medical profession have had to fight ts the temptation to follow off after one fad or another. These fads bring us under the ridicule of the laity at times. But of course we have our turn to laugh because we know a man will attempt suicide one day and call a doctor next day if he has the stomach ache! But we face the fact that abscessed teeth and tonsils have caused lots of serious illness. This fact can be explained to the victim of ill health and, after careful study of the case, patient and doctor will agree on a Television vs. Sound Transmission. Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, brings out the fact that there are other than mechanical obstacles in the way of radio television. Even the or-dinary facsimile transmission cannot be placed in the broadcasting wave band with out serious interference with the reception of the programs by thousands of listeners not interested in picture transmission. This arises from the fact that the frequency band must be broader for the picture than for sound transmission. In television, a frequency band still wider is requir-ed, so that "really high-grade television obviously cannot be conducted on the already congested broadcasting wave band, nor received by ordinary broadcasting receiving sets." Even if high-grade television becomes scien-tifically possible, this difference of wave band requirement may make it impossible for such receiving sets as most listeners can afford.—Columbus

She is not receiving her expenses from the Republican national committee nor is she traveling on government transportation. The evening mode for fall is interesting because it is so diversified. The mode of princess line is important and back fullness continues. Two of the most famous Paris contumieres drape the skirt in back and overlapping back panels form a symetrical train effect. Another well known designer puts a sprinkled bib kerchief tied in back. Some of the most important fabrics for evening dresses are print-ed velvet, satin moire, chiffon and metal brocades. Hips are swathed closely in gypsy-like girdles that have bodices that are slightly bloused and fullness placed low on the skirt. New neck treatments in evening gowns are pronounced, square and V necks being most stressed. Evening dresses sponsor length at the back and sides.

Daytime Frocks.

Perhaps the outstanding feature of the daytime frock for fall is the snug, swathed hipline. The waistline con-tinues at the top of the hip. The only resemblance that day frocks bear to each other as to neck line is a nega-tive one—not a single dress has a high or fitted collar. One run-about frock on tailored lines has an orange lingerie vestee with a soft, round collar—but all the other are open in some way—round or V-shaped, or knotted, or buttoned, or stitched.

The fall hat can be a "flop" and yet a success! The new notes seem to strike these soft tones — berets, cloches and turbans. Closely fitted to the head the principal charm of these hats seems to lie in the choice of ma-

HOOVER IS BUSY

Nominee Works Upon His Elizabethton, Tenn., Speech.

BY WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON. WASHINGTON, Sept. 26 .- The Republican national committe has adoped a "hmands off" policy, for the present, toward Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt and her single-handed prohibition crusade against the candidacy of Governor Alfred E. Smith.

This became known today at Herbert Hoover's headquarters as the Republican nominee continued to work upon his Elizabethton, Tenn., speech. It was learned too that the Hoover advisers have split upon the question of curbing Mrs. Willebrandt or giving her a free rein in the cam-

Hoover personally has declared himself opposed to "personalities" in the campaign and frequently has announced himself in favor of conducting an affirmative campaign, based only uption but the Hoover advisers have urged the nominee to let her case be handled by the national committee, which is conducting his campaign. was said.

Hoover meanwhile received encouraging reports from Wisconsin, one of the "wet" strongholds that Smith's supporters have claimed. Walter J. The decision of "passing the buck":

He declared, however, that the statement had been "overemphasized" and that it was made from an incomplete report of the sit-

Reports of the scholarship awards and the student loans given by the two colleges cited in the charge by Bird were made by their coaches at the meeting. Action to withdraw from the com-petition in the big six track group was also taken at the meeting. Move for withdrawal was taken because of a H. Brooks rule of the big six organization which R. Keay states that all schools participating C. Papendry must be enrolled in the Ohio confer-C. Ruddy

The post mortem addicts may be able to say that the better club won the pennant. They will say better but they will mean gamer. From today until the National league's official closing on Sunday, the two-club finish between the Cardinals and the Giants will be strictly a test of the traditional query: who has it, meaning the old "author-i-ety?"

The status of the pair in the club randings is mere mathematics. The Cards today are one game ahead with five to play, including the season's finish with the Dodgers this afternoon. If they take this one in stride while the Giants are idle, they will increase their lead to 1 1-2 games with only four to play. If they blow it, their lead to 1 1-2 games with only four to play. Romance in New York

By GILBERT ROGERS

His whisper came dirjointedly, in fragments, as if springing from hard thinking, battling its way through a tide of emotion. But she couldn't forgive him, not right away, though in her heart she had forgiven him

That was the error of it all, knowing that she cared so much, that if he hurt her, betrayed her, she would still go on caring, that if she did not see him any more, said good-by, she would not forget him.

"But you thought those things about me." She felt as if she were talking like someone who is sick, very slowly and deliberately, in a monotonous low tone.

"You thought that—you didn't even give me a chance to

"I was afraid to. After seeing you there—with him. Hiding like that. I was crazy when I saw you that night—out of my head almost. Why Adrian Martin you don't know-

"Because he has lots of affairs, do you think every

"Listen!" he said, raising his voice a little angrily. "Have you any idea of hat that man is like? I knowthough he doesn't know that I know-about something that happened in South America, last year. He came down. There was a wealthy rancher with a beautiful wife, beautiful, and Adrian Martin saw her. Then one night the husband was shot in the dark, shot, killeddo you understand?"

"Oh, do you mean-" "I mean that's the kind of man you visited at night and expected me not to think that—that—"

Why don't you let me tell you why I was there?" "Well?" Was there a lingering spark of disbelief in his voice, a suspicion that insulted her? Perversely she closed her lips. Tell him now—that she had gone to Martin to ask for a better job for Jerry, to try to help Jerry? Her pride rebelled.

"I-I won't tell you now. You've got to-to believe in me without that."

They had swung back again, and Sally felt her hos tility returning, so that she longed to be anywhere, anywhere in the world except here. The train was slacken-ing speed, coming into a way station. She jumped up. He called out to her, surprised, startled. She almost ran down the steps.

"Sally" He was calling. "Sally, I didn't mean . . ."
She was hurrying down the platform. Then the train started again. She saw him for one instant, looking back, standing on the lowest step. She had had her wish. She had gotten away from him. But now she was unhappier still!

CHAPTER 22.

"Oh, why-why do I do everything wrong? Everything?

Sally stood desolately on the lonely platform. In the distance was a black speck, already vanishing, the train the train with Jerry Evesham on board-vanishing from her.

And in front of her the drab little frame station, the elderly agent going inside with his lanterns, a bundle of flag signals under his arm. Nothing else except a road that looked sad and deserted in the late afternoon light, and beyond it fields and more fields.

"Please-could you tell me-that is, how far back it is to Newport?"
"Eleven miles, lady. Next train is . .

The next train didn't matter. Sally half closed an eye, and studied the old agent. "Now I wonder what he'd do if I asked him to give me a ticket, lend me the money?'

She gulped a little. Such a thin old face-he wouldn't understand. But she was well-dressed. She'd just say very quietly and firmly that . . . Just what would she say? He had locked the door, and was walking away with slow, careful steps, an old man—all his life behind him—She must stop thinking aimlessly, she must stop thinking aimlessly, she must speak to him . . . He went around the back of the build-

Sally made up her mind, and followed quickly. But act quickly enough. He had climbed into a small car that was parked there, fumbled for the switch, jolted down the road in a cloud of dust. Now she was all alone.

Eleven miles. Well, she could walk. There'd be care -lots of cars passing. It would be easy. "I'll be very particular about hat kind of car I select." She laughed at the picture hundreds of people begging her to ac cept a lift.

"wilight beginning to come down, a mournful twi light. Sally trudged ahead, thinking, worse still-tryng not to think.

He had been cruel, he had said unforgivable things but try as she would, it was not Jerry she was angr It was herself. She kicked the hard packed earth with one toe, kicked it furiously, remembering.

Oh, I deserve to lose him I deserve to lose him!" she withspered fiercely to herself. Jumping off the train like that, crazily, with far less reason than she had jumped on. Refusing to tell him just why she had been in Adrian Martin's house that night. He had a right to know. And out of mere perverseness she had refused to explain, demanding everything from him.
"If I think hard enough how sorry I am, if I think and try to tell him how I really feel, perhaps he'll get the

She frowned, begging forgiveness of a man who was now miles away, who could not hear.

"I love you, Jerry," she said under her breath. "I love you! Don't leave me! Come back to me! know I've been crazy, but I can't help it—it's because l live you, I'm so unfair to you." Suppose he didn't come back, suppose she never saw aim again! That would be a bitter price to pay for the statisfication of one moment's impulsive anger!

Cars came past, all the cars that were to offer her lifts, and sped by without slowing up at all. She half turned toward each in succession, feeling that they must see she was tired. But when the sixth car had passed her, she realized she had to do something besides merely look exhausted. She'd hail the next one -why not?

A Ford came clattering over the brow of the hill behind her. She stood still and waved. A timid little mouselike man at the wheel threw her a timid little mouselike glance. A large, swollen woman at his side glared at her indignantly. A flash of glances and they

"Oh, dear," said Sally, "that's no good. There must be something very suspicious-looking about me. Now if there were only a house somewhere near, where perhaps I could telephone Carlotta . Standing there, trying to find a way out, she did not hear the big limousine that came purring down the hill, did not even hear it, as she took an uncertain step forward Then it was too late. Someone screamed, brakes were suddenly applied. But the mudguard grazed her waist whirled her about like a chip, sent her stumbling, down on her knees in the ditch.

"Oh!" She tried to get up. The car had stopped. The chauffeur was hurrying back. "Hurt, Miss, hurt? You-I didn't see you." He was helping her up. No, not hurt somehow, but shaken up. frightened by the sudden unexpected violence of the thing. And her clothes a wreck, torn, dusty, dishevelled. The door of the limousine was swung open. A woman of middle-age with intolerant eyes and a harsh voice was peering out at her. "It was your fault. You stepped right in front of us. We saw you . . ."

"Mother!" A girl in a black hat, looking very gentle and concerned, halted the older woman. 'Mabel, I tell you all these people-they'll pretend in juries, do anything to sue you if they think you've got

"But I'm not hurt," said Sally simply.
"Oh!" The middle-aged woman looked relieved. 'But-" Sally hurried on desperately, as the chauffeur climed back to his seat. "But—I wonder if—that is, if you're going my way—"

"Oh, of course!" . The girl in the black hat smiled.
Her mother said crossly:

"We're going to Newport." "Well—so am I—"
"Get in, please. We're late."

Akron Grand Jury Refuses to Indict Divorcee, 18.

Girl Says She Shot PASTOR WILL GO Man Who Insulted

AKRON, O., Sept. 26.-Loveda AKRON, O., Sept. 26.—Loveda, Boyle, 18, of Oil City, Pa., today was free of legal responsibility in the killing of Robert McCormick, 31, Akron automobile salesman. Late yesterday the Summit county grand jury in a partial report announced that the charges against the attractive, red-hatred diverges had been "no billed" coming church year. haired divorcee had been "no billed."

At the same time an indictment was returned against A. J. Ritchie, local manager of Edson & Company, charging him with attacking Miss Boyle. He had not been arrested late yesterday, but will probably be taken into custody today.

Miss Boyle shot McCormick while hitch-hiking" her way from Okmulvorce, to her home in Oil City. On Sept. 14, she was given a "lift" near here in an automobile occupied by McCormick and Ritchie.

Ritchie was driving, she related, and she sat between the two. McCormick and Ritchie.

Cormick, she says, made improper advances and refused to heed her warnings. S'e shot him with a pearlhandled pistol which she carried, though she said she did not intend to hurt him seriously.

McCormick died the next day in a hospital and Miss Boyle, on learning of his death, immediately admitted the sheeting.

the shooting.

When informed last night that the grand jury had refused to indict her, either for second degree murder or for carrying concealed weapons, the girl was øvercome by emotion and sobbed, "I'm so glad the grand jury understood."

She plans to return home with her parents either today or tomorrow. She expects to take up training as a nurse, the young woman said.
